A: You probably should be using something other than add() and execute to instantiate the objects you want to query, if you don't want to "pass in values" to the objects. This question could probably be better if you put a complete example in your question. In any case, here's an example: from sqlalchemy.orm import sessionmaker, relationship Session = sessionmaker(extension=relationship('Book')) db = Session() db.add(Book(title='hello world')) # The following would work #db.session.query(Book).all() #The result is a list #The query effectively has the SQL #SELECT * FROM book where title = 'hello world' #But this would not work db.session.execute("SELECT id FROM book WHERE title = 'hello world'") # And this would also not work, unless you instantiate the Book object db.session.execute("SELECT id FROM book WHERE title = 'hello world'") # This would work mybook = Book(title='hello world') db.session.add(mybook) db.session.flush() db.session.execute("SELECT id FROM book WHERE title = 'hello world'") # This will work because we added the book to the # session after we executed the query db.session.execute("SELECT id FROM book WHERE title = 'hello world'") # If we
