What's New In PIXGet?

Download PIXGet today to grab different colors from the screen and get a grasp of your target application's interface. Description: When it comes to positioning elements on a web page, html text, images, and other elements have a natural tendency to get bunched up. This is because a browser typically grabs a text block first, and if it doesn't have enough space to fit all the contents on a page, it will center the next one. While it's not hard to position a text block manually, there are a bunch of other content such as HTML tags, images, div elements, and even colors, that fall under this category. Set a specific height and width for a div element The ability to define a specific height and width for a web element lets you avoid the tendency of having text get bunched up, with other related elements still maintain their positioning. By reducing the page size, it becomes easier to place a small button, or a logo. Option to change text color A good web browser should allow you to change text color without much hassle. To customize a div element's text, you can easily apply a specific color, or even select a random one from a predefined array. This is especially useful when an application's content or design is colored with a light color, and you want to display it with a darker shade. All you have to do is click the text box once, and a color chooser will pop up. At this point, you can use mouse movement to pick a color, or even use the # prefix to select the hexadecimal code, or the HEX format to save time. Option to resize a text box The ability to resize a text box lets you apply different font sizes or easily adjust the size of an image to suit your needs. You can also select between text, HTML, or any other kind of web content. This is especially handy when, for instance, you're trying to build a landing page, and need to make it visible at a different size. In terms of control over text, there are three main types of controls: background, font, and text color. To control background color, you'll need to click the background box, which shows a color chooser, with the option to pick the color from a panel of different backgrounds. You can use the mouse or keyboard to access the same thing. Also, to change font type, or size, you need to choose a font file from a list. Saving image files with custom dimensions To save an image from a text box, you'll need to manually resize it, and as a result, it will be cropped to a smaller size, possibly losing information. By choosing image format, and providing a size
