Text IT-BO is a simple program that allows you to set a set of messages (up to 30) and then type them with a single hotkey. You can use it to type messages while chatting in game, to keep the CPU from overheating, or to copy a set of characters to the clipboard. 2 comments I was very sad to discover that the messenger plugin for the VB forum software isn't working with IE11, or even with IE10, and that I'll have to stick with a WebDAV client. I have to say I can't really blame the plugin. The WebDAV protocol is a bit too obscure, and doesn't have the needed features for the UI to be attractive. The lack of a native support for the server protocol is the big problem. It's not easy to find a WebDAV client that can run in a browser. AFAIK the best one is xDAV, but it's not supported by every operating system, and it's only available for Microsoft platforms. Thanks to your article, I have found an alternative, exCommand. It's a command line utility that's a bit like winscp. While it's aimed at command-line operations, it's far more user friendly than winscp. You don't even have to read the documentation before trying the tool, and if you don't like it you can easily go back to the command line. The best thing is that the tool runs on every platform that supports Linux, and it's perfectly capable of connecting to various server. Some might have the impression that the usage of the command line is old-fashioned. It's not. Today we use so many applications and tools that run on the command line and yet we just don't notice them anymore. There are some applications that don't run on the command line, such as Nero or the like, but in these cases I guess the user is really just a second class citizen, that's why he's got to do everything on the command line.Q: How to activate a hyperlink within a dialog box?
