The Bus simulates a cityscooter bus service of a fictitious city called Aurum (The name combines "U" and "A" in German, Aurum means "gold"). The Bus is a short game of only 2 hours and 50 minutes. It consists of more than 80 minutes of gameplay. V1.0 is the current Early Access version. It will be ready for purchase in a few months, depending on how the Early Access goes. We are planning to release the game in May 2021. This is only a rough estimate. The Roadmap is a very rough approximation and may change before and during the Early Access. A later game may have different features If you want to help support the development and receive all kinds of updates you can vote for the The Bus on Steam Greenlight here Lurk on the official discord channel to get all the latest updates and have fun with the community. More information about our work and funding and the upcoming game can be found at our Website at Road Trips in Texas with Airmail 21 & Airmail 41 Driving from West to East Texas with Airmail 21 and Airmail 41 I made this video solely for the purpose of sharing with the few people that have requested that I make a detailed video of my trip to Texas and stop at certain places to visit. I highly recommend you get your cam and video camera ready for the road if you decide to go check out this entire TX TX-TEXAS route and check out the Fort Worth Airport. This particular route and stop in certain places requires a bus, flying is very dangerous given the many flights we go through each day. This week at Game Camp the Campfire story time was focused on virtual reality game design and development. A special series of posts will be focused on VR game design, concept art, and tools in the coming weeks and months. Our first session began with a discussion of the limitations, mechanics, and value propositions that define VR. One of the issues that many developers are confronted with is that there are very few experiences that define what VR gaming is. Designing and developing VR games can be difficult. When it comes to exploring the relationship between technology, experience and aesthetics, VR is a unique medium. So, what should we expect from a VR experience? Oculus Rift Controllers - 6DOF motion controls with dual analogue sticks and triggers for quick responsive movement. - Lightguns - Add a gun to your virtual hands! Use the left stick to aim and fire and the right stick to look around with aim tracking. - Augmented Reality - Looking at the world through your virtual eye! Place objects into your surroundings, with tilt and gaze controls. A unique way to experience a virtual world. Keyboard, Mouse, Gamepad - For all the not-so-adventurous who dont like the new controller. Vive: Haptics & Touch - Haptics and Touch are core elements of VR that can be experienced as completely visceral. - Paired with a power-corded gamepad or an analog stick with a USB cord - you can experience perfect hand tracking as you look down to look up. - IAC Headset: If all else fails, you can use the headset. Studio Performance Training - Join the world's only professional development center for Oculus. With a place designed specifically for creative and development work, they'll take you beyond the scope of simple kit building and help you develop and deliver VR projects. Key partners include Oculus, Facebook, and Unity Technologies. - David Meet the Development Team - - Tim Quick Report -On the 12th of June in 1900, two children - Max and Jenny Parry - were born. The first signs of their extraordinary mind began to appear when, at the age of five, they showed a marked inclination towards mathematics. This inclination would remain with them for the rest of their lives. Max would eventually become a professor of mathematics, whilst Jenny would become a doctor, and an author. At the age of eleven, Jenny, who
