As in birds, vitellogenin (Vg) is the major yolk protein of the Nile crocodile (Crocodylus niloticus), and the spectrum of its effects on the hematologic system of a monomorphic female cheetah (Acinonyx jubatus) has been characterized. Injection of the ovary of a 1-yr-old female cheetah with a hypoestrogenic extract (1 ml) of human Vg produced two different effects, depending on Vg dosage (0.3 or 1 mg). Erythropoietin (Epo) stimulated response and induced a conspicuous erythropoiesis in all cheetahs tested. After the first injection of 0.3 mg Vg, there was no further reaction; however, after the second injection of 1.0 mg Vg, it induced a further increase in erythrocyte count and size. The Vg treatment did not induce an increase in circulating hemoglobin, reticulocyte count, or hematocrit, but caused a sharp fall in serum iron. No increase in retic
