In human sporadic colon cancers, TP53 and RB genes are the most frequently mutated with accumulation of epigenetic alterations and high levels of DNA methylation. The overall goal of this proposal is to identify early environmental triggers of colon carcinogenesis by investigating the role of the dietary estrogen bisphenol A (BPA) in causing these alterations. BPA is an endocrine disruptor that is widely used in the manufacture of polycarbonate plastics. Studies in several laboratories, including our own, have found that BPA can induce colon and breast tumors in rodents and induce proliferative changes in colonic mucosa in humans. In particular, BPA causes
