Autodata Cam.2016 Summer Sophomore College Handbook Schedule 2015-16 College College College.1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to the removal of acetylene from acetylene-enriched natural gas streams. 2. Description of the Prior Art The present availability of natural gas in the lower 48 States has created a demand for the production and utilization of acetylene and liquified petroleum gas products, such as liquefied petroleum gas (LPG), propane, butane, ethylene and propylene, at economically feasible prices. Acetylene is a very versatile compound that may be burned in almost any type of installation, and many industries use a portion of the acetylene to produce ethylene, propylene, etc. Products, such as ethylene or ethane, that have a relatively high demand in world markets make the acetylene produced from natural gas available more economically. Acet
