The freshwater diatom, Aurantiochytrium sp. GK24, was cultivated using glucose and potato starch hydrolysate in order to develop a microbial system for the production of polysaccharides. Highest alginate productivity was obtained in a bioreactor operated with a cell culture of 6 h of age, a glucose concentration of 50 g/L and a potato starch hydrolysate concentration of 6.5% (w/v). The two substrates were statistically comparable in terms of growth, alginate production and yield, and total biomass production. The alginate obtained in the bioreactor was soluble and typical of LMW-alginate. It was characterized by viscosimetric and viscometric analysis. e-Lottery sites of India Only the
