The story of the game : You are a normal man, who works for his daily pay Unfortunately for you, daily is a little bit more long, than it should be. One day, your boyfriend has an accident and dies, leaving you with your only son. To support his son, you go to work everyday, but your need is not gone yet. Start of the Game: Your mom asks you to go home, you say "alright" and you go home. Go home to your room. You see that you have a computer with you, it is an old and broken one, but it has enough to ask you to play online with other people. However, you only have two days to play. So you need to play from then to now. Gameplay: Like other idle clicker games, Idle Warrior has 10 buttons which are used to move your warrior. The combat is the most important part of the game, so you can upgrade your warrior to battle against more enemies. The attacks are unique and different, so do not think your warrior is the same as the other. There are various attacks like a spear, a sword, a hammer, a flame, etc. You can also upgrade your character and unlock new skills. Code: Strings: This game is fully translated from English to Turkish. The translation was made by @Erebsturk. Thank you very much for your help. compressed_strings.ts.php array('id' => '1',

PRESS "N" to toggle between the night mode and a clear screen. If you are already in the night mode, just press "N". If you are in the game and want to switch to night mode, just press "N". You'll get deeper into the dark. The game starts with one simple thing - to hide 20 cats in the big city. You know, there are so many cats in the big city. As we don't really like cats, we decided to hide them. Thus, we need a special place where we can hide them. Let's find such a place. Press "E" to exit the menu. Now let's start the game. We need an exit, and it won't be easy to find one. There is a place that is used as a parking lot and a public sanitary restroom. It's very strange. The building does not have stairs or a lift. So, that's a great place for hiding our cats! There must be a way to get there. Let's try to find a way to the restroom. But when we are going to exit, the game will end. Are you afraid of the cat? Let's search for another way out. There are many types of buildings that are built in such a way that they can be entered from the outside. There are many ways to exit the parking lot. Let's look around. There is something interesting. Let's see what this means. Let's go to the other side and look around. I think that there are exits, and here they are. So, we managed to get there. Let's search for the exit to the restroom. We found it, but what are we going to do? This reminds me of a horror movie. It's better to escape than to hide cats here. Let's try to run. But I forgot about the cat. I can't run away! Well, this is a problem. Our goal is to get to the exit. So, how do we get there? I can run, but the cat runs away. Let's try to run into the toilet. c9d1549cdd

o--BEIRUT (Reuters) - Syrian state media reported late on Thursday that Syrian President Bashar al-Assad made a rare visit to the cradle of Christianity and Western culture in the capital, Damascus. State television broadcast images of the Syrian leader arriving in the UNESCO World Heritage Site city of Palmyra, located 250 km (160 miles) northeast of Damascus, with Assad, the army and regional allies. "Palmyra is a heritage that must be preserved... for the entire world," Assad said, according to the Al-Watan newspaper. "We are participating in this campaign to save the Syrian heritage." An army officer said the army had been trained to protect and preserve the cultural sites in the country. U.S.-backed Syrian forces have recently liberated areas of Homs, once one of the country's biggest cities, and are fighting to dislodge Islamic State from the eastern province of Deir al-Zor. With Assad retaining his position and Russian support, his forces have made significant gains. The army, Russia, Iranian-backed militias and Shi'ite Muslim militias known as the Popular Mobilization Units are all active in the city. Islamic State fighters held the city of Palmyra until December 2015 and are thought to have held some of its ancient Roman-era ruins. Their hold on the site was confirmed last month by the SDF. It was recaptured by the Syrian army last year. Syrian state media regularly show images of Assad's visit to Syria's religious sites, sometimes also taking the opportunity to commemorate the anniversary of the death of his father Hafez al-Assad. Another war-time ruler, President Gamal Abdel Nasser of Egypt, was known for his frequent visits to Sinai, in the peninsula forming the southernmost part of his country, to commemorate his leader, President Abdel al-Hafez. Last September, he planted a palm tree in the house where Nasser's father had lived when he was head of state. The Egyptian president died in 1970 at the age of 79. A Texas-based company called Zünd recently set out to find people who could grow a barn using little more than a lawn mower. The results? By the looks of their video, it appears they succeeded. And if the video and accompanying images of the tractor-sized structures aren't enough to convince you,

Preston Estep Special Collections & Architecture Library, University of Houston 9/01/2018 Preston Estep examines navigation innovation in the 14th and 15th centuries, explaining many complex issues about naval cartography and geodesy. Most readers would not expect to find such detailed discussions of map-making in the history of exploration. Yet the history of navigation around the globe can be understood at many different times scales. In addition, a number of different theories can be used to approach the topic. In this course, Estep focuses on two broad categories of early theorists. The first group is "gamblers" who traveled with detailed navigational maps, plus a small number of other findings. The second includes many associations who used their personal curiosity as a background for discoveries about exploration. [Included in Admission]Cost: Free

Preston Estep is Distinguished Professor at the University of Houston, where he has taught since 1982. Specializing in North American history, Estep is the author of several books including, "Adventures at Sea: A History of the Great Age of Travel" (2014) and "Lost Voyages: Myth and Realm in the Age of Exploration" (2012). His next book, to be published in 2019, is "Aft Across the Atlantic: An Irreverent Travelogue of the Age of Columbus." He is co-editor of such books as "Columbus: His Enterprise" and, with Leif Davi, "New Horizons: The Roald Amundsen & Robert Falcon Scott Voyages, New Clues for the Story of Their Epic Voyage to the South Pole," (2017). And, he is writing "Crosstalking the Silk Road; Commerce, Trade, and Markets in the Southern Silk Roads" as his next major book. Among other things, he has edited the book "Hernando de Soto and the Indians of the Mississippi Basin," which won the Society for Spanish Exploration of the Americas' Award of Merit, and he has done a number of radio and television documentaries on the Golden Age of Shipbuilding and Exploration. The History of Global Navigation Katherine Butler 9/26/2018 How did people know where they were at the beginning of the 14th century? How do we know where they went? And what were the maps they used to make navigation possible?
