Aims: This is a Phase-III, randomized, open-label, parallel-group, active-controlled trial to assess the efficacy and safety of raloxifene (RLX) 60 mg once daily vs tamoxifen (TAM) 20 mg once daily for the treatment of postmenopausal women with primary or secondary osteoporosis. This study provides the opportunity to compare the efficacy and safety of raloxifene and tamoxifen in reducing the risk of subsequent fracture for postmenopausal women with osteoporosis. With the demonstration of equivalence between raloxifene and tamoxifen, raloxifene can be used in the prevention of fractures with better tolerability and possibly, similar efficacy. The incidence of osteoporotic fracture increases with age. In the USA, the annual incidence of hip and other fractures is estimated at 400,000 and 600,000, respectively. The projected annual reduction in fracture risk with osteoporosis therapy is in the order of 10%. Increased rates of uterine and breast cancer are seen with tamoxifen, a finding which has limited its use for the prevention of fractures. In women treated with tamoxifen for either primary or secondary osteoporosis, the incidence of uterine cancer is increased by 40%. The unique mechanism of action of raloxifene may provide a more acceptable benefit-risk profile for the prevention of osteoporotic fractures. Raloxifene has been shown to increase bone mineral density (BMD) at the spine and hip without a significant increase in uterine or breast cancer risk, or thromboembolic risk. There is currently no evidence to support using
