I do not like grogs. Je sais, I am a loathsome sort of rascal.

Still, that does not mean that I cannot enjoy a deadHalloween costume.

This is legit though, for me anyways.

Q: Why does a file containing "IGNORED", "EXCLUDED" or "ENABLED" flags not affect a subsequent ADD operation? I am using Ansible (1.9.4) to build a list of files that are excluded and the list of files that are included. I am using the standard module file for my task. The files I am including in the first task are ignored. As I include and exclude my files, the list of excluded files shows up as an empty file. Then I run a list of included files. The result shows nothing. Then I try to manually add the excluded files to the include file. I do so by including a "-" into the exclude or include file and another file with the same name. The resulting list has one file in it. Why is the "-" the only element in the resulting list? Why doesn't this affect the include file? A: Your missing files are still in the includes file, they just aren't listed. That is because that file is a "semantic version" of the in-memory (state) list. It is only a description of what is on your system and does not itself contain the actual files.

FILE PHOTO: Premier Li Keqiang attends a news conference with Prime Minister of Japan Shinzo Abe on the third stage of the PM2.5 air pollution and PM10 particulate matter control plan of Beijing in Beijing, China December 10, 2018. REUTERS/Jason Lee BEIJING (Reuters) - China's premier on Wednesday urged high-level managers to step up reforms of state-owned firms, saying proper management and reform are the only way to continue economic growth. China has been under fire in recent years over the damaging impact of state-led growth on the environment, biodiversity and social stability. "Going forward, high-level managers need to be more accountable, more responsible," Premier Li Keqiang said at an annual meeting with top executives of China's institutions, here. China's president and chairman of the Communist Party's Central Committee, Xi

Jinping, and other leaders have been taking measures to tackle chronic pollution and push for the economy to become more eco-friendly. China's economic growth is now the lowest in nearly 30 years as policymakers have focused on stemming the corruption, rigidity and waste
