There are significant improvements to the ball control system for both players and AI as well as more anticipation, movement and realistic tackle behaviour. New animation and player models are used to realistically recreate the complexity of player movement and understanding its relationships with each other. An enhanced physics engine has been applied to every player on the pitch to achieve increased accuracy and speed of gameplay. AI improvement has also seen more intelligent tackling, calling off players and tactics selection as well as more realistic tackling behaviour and more reactive players from the other team. One of the most significant advancements in FIFA 20 is a new tactical AI. This helps players to predict upcoming opponent moves and it will leave players open and change formations to exploit a player's weakness. New IQ-based tackle logic also applies tackling algorithm to every player and it changes their behaviour during the game. Both AI and player models now more accurately reflect the facial expressions, movements and anthropometric data from real players. FIFA 17 was the first FIFA game to use motion capture data to help design the player models. This is the largest library of real-player models so far, which includes players from all over the world, including six real-life Scottish pros - Niko Kranjcar, Robbie Winters, Edin Dzeko, Steven Naismith, Steven Gerrard and Scott Brown. With the best-in-class technology being applied to this new model generation, players in this game will be as realistic to you and your friends in real life as ever before. Players can now run for longer distances thanks to the improved "charge" system. New animations and transitions have been added for high-intensity periods of play. These allow players to shift weight on to their leg as they shoot forward on forays into the opposition's box, creating a much more agile player. The new "Dream League Soccer" mode has been added to the Ultimate Team mode. This revolutionary new mode encourages players to improve the quality of their game and practice skills without the need for the purchase of a single new player. With over 200 player attributes and the support of over 30,000 real-life footballing legends, this is FIFA at its most authentic. The new mode, Online Dream League Soccer, now enables you to compete against your friends across the world and earn FIFA Points in the process. Showcase your skills with 10 unique soccer legends, such as Franz Beckenbauer, Zinedine Zidane, Diego Maradona, Pele

The FIFA series of football video games was started back in 1989 by a team led by John Llaneras and Aaron Chang in Redmond, Washington, USA. Since its release, the game has been developed by multiple teams and released across numerous platforms including PC, PlayStation 2, PlayStation 3, Xbox, Xbox 360, PlayStation 4, iOS and Android as well as numerous mobile platforms like Windows Phone. In 2011 the franchise was bought by Electronic Arts and in 2012 the games were released on the next generation of consoles and have received a large amount of critical acclaim and numerous awards. “We want to put the ball in the final third, put the ball in the box, let them score,” “It is called football, not soccer,” “American football, not soccer,” These three quotes taken from the 2015 FIFA 16 announce trailer are the driving force behind most people when asked about football video games. To an American the word soccer makes them think of some lazy men in skimpy shorts chasing a piece of a ball with a stick. To a European the word football means something that they play in a match between two teams of 11 players each. To us Brits, the game is simply football. It is for children, and, as a whole, it has been something we have been used to playing for years. We grew up playing it on our Nintendo Wii and PlayStation 2. We loved football and it was our favourite thing to do. We would all gather round the TV and watch and shout, “Yes!” as the defender’s lunges and dodges forced the ball to the other side. We called our friends over and played the game and every time we lost to each other we would just watch and shout, “Yes!” until the end and laughed as our opponents gave up. It just didn’t matter as we had just had the best time we could possibly have had at that moment. We loved the game, but, as we got older, more and more of our friends just couldn’t stand football and that was that. To us this was our football. It was who we were. This was our football. The FIFA series always had a slight brogue but was always British in theme, and really, the only thing that differentiated it from other football games was the fact that your team could actually play a game and score a goal. It was one
