Managing a football team is an incredibly complex process. Every decision you make as a coach, player or manager impacts your team and ultimately it's results. It's a philosophy that's been a part of the FIFA franchise since the launch of the first game in 1999. The heart of the game is in those moments: overcoming adversity to win. There are just too many variables to account for when trying to control a football team. As we are entering an exciting time for The Virtual Pitch as we celebrate the 10th anniversary of FIFA, it's an opportunity to look back at our evolution and how we've grown. In celebration of this milestone, we're proud to release EA SPORTS FIFA 19, one of the most innovative FIFA games ever made. For the 10th anniversary of the game, we wanted to look back on our history and re-examine the milestones that helped us get here today: Managing a team is hard work. Even on a replica pitch, using video clips from the real world is the best way to represent movement and speed in a game. In FIFA 14, the physics engine delivered the highest quality on-the-pitch movement ever seen in football games. The best players in the world could finally be truly represented in the game thanks to the physics engine. Most would agree that FIFA 13 was one of the best games of all time. FIFA 16 brought with it a new type of play. Players would push off the ball and explode into flight to run away with the game. Players could run past multiple defenders as opponents dropped back to protect the ball. It was a revolutionary moment in our history with the game. The physics engine was back for FIFA 17. We were eager to see where we could push the engine and what the results would be. We pushed our physics engine to the limit to develop the best pitch-side physics ever seen in a video game. With FIFA 18, we found a new direction in the game: we created a unique pitch engine that could be used for entire stadiums across the globe. This was a watershed moment and the foundation of what would become the EA SPORTS FIFA World Tour. As we enter the next chapter of EA SPORTS FIFA and our 20th year as a brand, we

However, 2 companies stood out. The first was Brøderbund's The Hobbit, an adventure game written by Ralph Baer, a brilliant programmer who had worked on the original Pong at Atari. The second was a small company called Electronic Arts. Its origins lay in a tiny office on the outskirts of Boston.
