In PUBG, up to 100 players drop onto an island, and the first to reach the goal—a rooftop marked by a single distant flag—is the winner. You can play on both Xbox and PC, and if you're using your Xbox One, you can also play the game on the screen of your phone. It is a battle royale game that plays like all of the other battle royale games, but it is also and in no small part a response to all of the negative press battle royale games get. The developers at Bluehole have created an absolute masterpiece of polished gameplay, smooth framerate, and great community immersion. The best thing about this game is the realism, but then it's possible to do this with a video game. What is Battle Royale? It's like the Hunger Games for adults. The developers at Bluehole found a new way to monetize the game, one where it actually makes money instead of (generally) just waiting until somebody buys a new video card. It is a little like the old grind style games, where you earn money and get perks over time. When players die, they drop money on the island in certain amounts. This money is then allotted to players who are below that money amount when they die. That's right, losing is good. It really gives the game a new feeling, a new mechanic, and turns what was originally a very die-heavy game into something that people can actually live through. This iteration of Battle Royale has received improvements in the form of added gun pickups (which are commonly scattered around the island), loot, and added variety in enemies. How to Play: The best things in life are free. Generally. Battle Royale is a multiplayer game, and to play you have to own a copy of the game (Xbox Live only), and of course an Xbox, or Windows PC. You don't need to be connected to the internet to play, but you will want to. You have a variety of weapons, and also grenades of various varieties. Weapons are dropped when players are killed, and can be picked up by nearby players. With every item drop, you're able to check how much the item is worth, and is based on the items rarity. Most items are common, and have a starting value of $10,000, while some rare items have a starting value of $600,000. This means that when someone dies, others can still quite c9d1549cdd

Fireworks fair draws few revelers Santa Ana Fire Department officials said there were only about 20 people at the displays set up at Tyler Park and Fourth Avenue and Fourth. "The crowds were there, they were just not large," said Santa Ana Deputy Police Chief David Benoist. Police seemed to be more concerned about a lack of public safety than about establishing Fourth of July flair, with police officers stationed at each entrance in addition to a few officers standing near the fireworks display. A large group of high school students, perhaps too many to be at the fair on a holiday, arrived near Fourth and Main while school let out and were clashing with police officers, some wielding box cutters as weapons, when officers formed a line and moved the students back. "I got five bucks out there," said teen Blake Vermith, 11. Another group of youths in a back playground area were eventually charged with disturbing the peace, police said. Their age wasn't released. Santa Ana police officers and firefighters gathered Tuesday evening at a major Fourth of July display fair along 4th Avenue, which drew about a hundred people at the height of the evening. Firefighters had to call for backup from the Orange County Fire Authority after several dozen fireworks stalled and ricocheted through the crowd, setting off six new panic alarms. The fireworks had been given their permit and registered by the city on Tuesday, but erupted without supervision and were not re-arrested by police until the scene was cleared and helped by more firefighters. The July Fourth fireworks display, which will be held this year on the Santa Ana River Trail, will run from 9 p.m. until 9:30 p.m. and feature a total of 81,000 square feet of fireworks, Santa Ana Fire Battalion Chief Mark Potter told The Orange County Register on Wednesday. It's been
