Bacterial vaginosis is a syndrome characterised by a change in vaginal microflora from the normal lactobacilli and cocci-type flora to a sexually transmitted disease-like flora. The aetiology of this disorder is still debated and methods to examine vaginal microflora have evolved from the original acid and direct microscopic methods to culture and histology. A non-invasive sanitiser liquid was applied to 60% (N = 12) of women attending an antenatal clinic at 5-8 days post-conception, and 5 min later vaginal swabs were taken. These swabs were examined using the Yip and Maori methods and a polymerase chain reaction (PCR) method for Gardnerella vaginalis. The liquid was tolerated well by all subjects and was well tolerated by the babies. Vaginal conditions improved with the use of the liquid, but conditions worsened after withdrawal of the intervention. Both the Yip and Maori methods correlated with each other and PCR well with the presence of G. vaginalis. The results indicate that the liquid provided adequate disinfection of the vagina. The Yip and Maori methods correlate well with the presence of G. vaginalis, but the latter method is more susceptible to contamination and less practical.Technical Field The present disclosure relates generally to vehicles and, in particular, to a latch and catch mechanism for a vehicle door.
