As only the best Supernatural fans know from Vampires vs. Werewolves on mobile you first choose one of the Supernatural factions, like Vampires or Werewolves with the goal of conquering different cities of the world (there will be more factions with upcoming updates). You play a 1v1 real-time strategy battle where you control your units to capture regions of the map. The player will have to manage their resources, and balance early-game aggression via spamming units on board with the late-game combo abilities that can annihilate the units very easily. You will be able to buy buildings in each region changing what kind of resources that region provides you with. In addition to the abilities, units, and buildings the game features lore-rich events that will introduce new characters, and will force you to make difficult decisions that will lead to game changing consequences. The variety in the combination above will make each gameplay unique, and will increase the replayability of the game. There will be several maps to choose from, and the player will have to keep in mind the unique features of each map when they try to conquer it. Each faction also has unique Lords, and similar advisors that grant different upgrades in-game influencing the strategy you'll choose to play the game. One of the things I love about the internet is that it's amazing how many unknown, uncensored, and untampered with materials are gathered, and quickly. One of those, is this mysterious "Hills On Fire" video by artist Tomi Awade. The video stars a white blur, roughly two and a half minutes long (the artist and the person who uploaded it have toted up to 25 minutes), just sitting and staring quietly at the camera. It's not clear what it is supposed to be, but I love the possibility of it being an impression of having arrived at a state of bliss. While many of us could likely dream of something like this, I'm surprised that the artist doesn't use a "happy" sound track, with faint but familiar voices. Perhaps the artist finds the effect of simply watching the white blur in silence much more intimate, and would prefer not to coddle us. But still.
