Ain't no man gonna stop me, from falling in love with my Sen Come on and let me take you over, beyond this world into paradise Ain't no man gonna stop me, I'm taking you over, beyond this world into paradise Rei: Thelema, her Dog I look down on people, and forget them all by the time I die So I take the ones that I love, and leave 'em in my heart There's a destiny I'll never forget, deep in my soul Re: [Ascension/2.5 Update] How to activate the Ascension & Reincarnation to earn PSO2's Most Important Memory ~ Special Video If you have anymore changes for Ascension, please post them here so we have an accurate representation of what to expect. The second method is $12.50 and is a little out of pocket but you'll be able to get every last Revenant regardless of the cost. Most importantly the Ascension feature where you can collect every last memoir this game has to offer. For those of you who do not know the Ascension feature has three different phases, or levels: Phase 1 Phase 2 Phase 3 In Phase 1, as the name implies, it is possible to collect all of the 10 memoirs that are scattered throughout the game. Each one costs $7.00 and can be bought at the party shop, so you must purchase the Ascension Pack for this to be activated. Once purchased it unlocks all 10 of the Revenants from the Ascension feature. This is the cheapest way to get these Revenants and the last three are the priciest. The Ascension Package also unlocks a Currency X and two of the subqu

What's new in MindSeize:

Dark before Dawn Sortie Day, 1944 William McDonald was predisposed to dislike Lieutenant Colonel James H. Robard, their current mission leader. He was not pleased that his unit had been reassigned to fight the Germans and then assigned to clean up Lieutenant Colonel Robard's mess. Most of their company was wiped out when the mission they had been sent out to execute did not go as planned. The rest of the company was scattered across the Lorraine region of France after taking heavy losses from German anti-aircraft fire. The reason for the move was that the squadron that Lieutenant Colonel Robard had been attached to over the summer was now no longer available. The squadrons were now involved with defense of the area around Antwerp which was under siege by the German Twenty-Fifth Army. That meant they would be defending from a different direction and would be a lot closer to Belgium. Lieutenant Colonel Robard had been reassigned to another division which meant he would be working with another lieutenant colonel, which prompted McDonald to grumble that their commanding officers couldn't stand one another. He was more concerned about Lieutenant Colonel Robard's willingness to fight the Germans to save his own hide. The lieutenant colonel was no fighter. He wanted to be a career Marine officer and not a combat aviator. After Flight Officers were accepted into the Regular Marine Corps, they were allowed to hold one combat slot while still doing their regular duties. The Federal Grant qualified as that and if Lieutenant Colonel Robard had continued his flight career during the next round of promotions, Lieutenant Colonel General Geiger would probably have promoted him to Captain.

The regular Marine Corps was not ready to do so in 1944. They didn't want any of the officer corps to be unfit for combat. Men who had done their share of killing, could protect their fellows. Making Lieutenant Colonel Robard a fighter was more a reward for him than an act of good leadership. McDonald had worried about the lieutenant colonel in the first place because if his unit had been reconnoitering the site of their next mission, he would have met them there. Lieutenant Colonel Robard was no leader in a fight. It was only after striking out on the first mission that Lieutenant Colonel Robard's unit had decided to carry on with the recon mission instead of press on for Belgium. McDonald was beginning to appreciate the old shirker. Robard had the option of being a tough Marine leader or
