Bots Win Battle for Catfood - liuliu ===== jcr The article is interesting, but it's short on details. Does anybody know how it's actually done? Could be really interesting to know what's going on under the hood. What I did find interesting was the longevity of the winning bots: "_" The winning Go bot has been trained for more than 17 years, starting in the age of the Internet as small users began playing the game at home. " --- ericmo Yeah, the article goes into a lot of detail, including, "the machine learning algorithm used weighs every move before choosing between the best and the worst." [----- brudgers It's interesting from a strategic point of view, but the underlying technology might not be inherently interesting. It's probably just a straight application of reinforcement learning using Boltzmann sampling. [
