Photoshop has many features for advanced users as well. For example, the healing brush (available under the Edit menu) restores burnt portions of images, or the Liquify Filter liquifies the pixels in an image. However, I will present some tips and tricks that are commonly used by beginners. Making adjustments to the image As a rule, you don't really mess with the raw image unless you're an experienced user. In my opinion, people often get nervous when they find their image adjustments no longer showing up. The good news is that this fear of messing up your image isn't justified — the image you have in front of you is the one that Photoshop saved, not the image that you accidentally messed up. (In Chapter 3, I show you how to make the most of this.) You can, however, easily adjust the color, contrast, or brightness of an image in Photoshop. You can also adjust the color by using specific color adjustment tools. If you find it hard to recognize the items in the Tools panel, simply left-click on the work area and drag the cursor across the image to select the area you want to work on. Working with the Adjustment Panel To make changes to the image, you first open the Adjustment Panel (it's at the right end of the panel strip). This is a very powerful feature — with it, you can, for instance, adjust exposure, brightness, contrast, or color. I show you how to use it in Chapter 12. If you want to start from scratch or add a new adjustment, click the New Adjustment button. If you're already using an adjustment, such as a Levels adjustment, you can either select it from the Adjustments panel by clicking it or make a new adjustment using that adjustment. In addition to the standard settings, you can click the thumbnail of a preset adjustment to apply its effect to the selected area or even load a custom preset adjustment. Finding Black and White The Color is Photoshop's main component. But you can also modify an image using the other available tools. To affect only the black and white elements of the image, choose Enhance⇒Adjust Color⇒Levels (Windows) or Levels (Mac OS). You can fine-tune the effect with the slider next to the Levels window or click in the Levels window and drag. Brushing Color In addition to using the Color tool, you can use the Brush tool to paint

Q: Using an Http POST for a HMVC form I've been reading through the "Intro to HMVC" article from CodeIgniter and in particular I was looking at the HMVC examples including the blog index page. I'm not sure why my below code isn't working. The delete function never gets called, but my route is correct. So I don't understand what's going on? Models/Home.php public function delete() { $this->db->delete('posts', array('id' => '=', $this->id)); } Controller/Home.php function delete($id) { $this->load->model('Home_model'); $post = $this->Home_model->delete($id); if ($post) { $this->load->view('home_view'); } else { $this->load->view('home_error'); } } View/home_view.php id);?>" method="post"> Delete Post #id;?>? Any help on this is appreciated! Thanks! A: Your form is wrong, your controller should only return json from an action and the form should submit its data to the AJAX handler in the same page Controller function delete($id) { $this->load->model('Home_model'); $post = $this->Home_model->delete($id); if ($post) { $data = array('status'=> true,'message'=> 'Post removed successfully!', 'id' => $post->id); echo json_encode($data); } else { $data = array('status'=> to include all sectors. 2. The labour force was derived from the data on the monthly survey of the British population provided by the Office for National Statistics (ONS) (ONS, 2015). The ONS collects a wide range of data on the labour market, including unemployment data, but only provides a data series for a very limited number of age-sex groups. The age grouping used in the sample is the one used in the Labour Force Survey (LFS), which forms part of the Labour Force Survey (LFS) conducted by the ONS. 3. The labour force participation rates are estimates of the proportion of the civilian labour force with a job (age 15 years and over). The rates for men and women are derived from the age-sex groups used in the Labour Force Survey (ONS, 2012). The same groups are used in the GBD measure of labour force participation (GBD 2013 Labour Force Participation Projections). 4. The data on unemployment, in particular, are likely to suffer from significant measurement error, particularly with respect to the low-end of the income distribution. This may limit comparability between the two series. 5. In addition, because the ONS also collect data on the labour force participation of the 16–64 age group, the GBD measure of labour force participation reflects the age profile of the population used for generating the GDP estimate of labour productivity, which is not necessarily the same as the full population age profile. This may limit comparability between the two series. 6. Some further adjustments are made for the non-response in the estimates of the labour force participation rate (ONS 2012 Labour Force Survey, 2013), based on the propensity-to-sample weights supplied by the ONS. The employment rate is derived by dividing the labour force rate by the population, after deducting the number of those who are not in the labour force. 7. Further adjustments are made for the fact that estimates of labour force participation rates and employment rates for certain age groups are affected by uncertainty, as well as for the fact that the data used for derivation are subject to missing value problems (specifically, values below 0.1 or above 100 in the sex-specific labour force participation series and below 0.01 or above 1000 in the age-sex-specific employment series) (ONS, 2013). 8. The unemployment rates are derived by dividing the number of unemployed by the labour force, after deducting the number of people in active unemployment (
