As the first person into space, I must apologize for the pathetic excuse that is Space Hack. I only really ever used this as a development tool for myself, but I thought I would share it because it is damn cool! The aim of Space Hack is to replicate what you would do in a game like Goldeneye. In order to do that, you must select the correct items that are on the ground and then have your character, Agent 17, perform the action. Space Hack was born during one of those rage quit hours in the early 90s where I wanted to take my flamethrower, blast through some doors and kill some space invaders before my dad finished searching the ship for valuables. The hardware is awful, so if you are a fan of the game, be prepared to deal with some very slow gameplay. If you have a disc drive though, you can build custom levels which can be quite fun. I'd recommend this to anyone that has a strong love of old-school FPS games. The Aim: Space Hack has a standard game mechanic similar to that of the popular

Goldeneye series. The difference is that you can have only one life. Each level will have a time limit, which will go down when you die. As soon as you die, you must re-enter the level at the main start. However, Space Hack has a few bonuses to that. There are bonuses that will push the time limit down more rapidly if you perform certain actions. Additionally, you can choose to be a female character or a male character. The female character has her life go down as normal, but she will also slowly lose her ability to shoot while losing health. Additionally, she will have more of a tendency to stumble, which might cause her to fall into oblivion. The female character has her life go down as normal, but she will also slowly lose her ability to shoot while losing health. The male character, Agent 17, will not experience the time-losing effects. He will also retain full health, but he will also suffer the same stumbling effect as the female character. These actions are weighted to balance out. One of these actions is the ability to select a target. Selecting a target means that you will be following that target, and you will be able to shoot at it and damage it. After you perform a select action, you will be able to fire continuously until the target is dead or until the time limit expires.

So what do you think? Do any of these armor sets have enough to offer to make them worthy of a slot in certain classes? Do you like the customization of each of them? Do you think these sets have enough elements to hold their own compared to those sets out there already? Do you prefer using other armor sets or using none at all? Which set do you think is the best for a main? Let me know in the comments section below.
