Welcome to this special issue of the journal, 'Pakistan's contribution to the training of the health workforce for maternal and neonatal health in the developing world'. A theme that is not new to the journal since this issue is also on maternal and neonatal health. There is a rich tradition of producing educational materials that support maternal and neonatal health, in particular relevant to low-income and low-middle income countries, from several countries including Pakistan. However, the Journal was the first to be indexed by the Google Index and have a foot-hold on the 'Google Scholar' search engine. This gave the Journal a greater visibility and therefore your choice of paper is much wider. Most of the important developments in Pakistan and other countries are reported in newspapers and journals, which act as the primary source of information for policy makers. However, many of the experiences related to health systems development in Pakistan are not well reported. Even today in Pakistan, there is an overrepresentation of papers on medicine and health technology (
