Let V be an open set in $\mathbb{R}^n$. Consider the following property: $\text{$x$ in V is an interior point of V}$. This property is obviously implied by the fact that V is open, but not vice versa. In that case, assume that V is convex (or more generally: a convex hull is an open set). Does the implication above hold? A: For any subset U of $\mathbb{R}^n$ we have that U is convex if and only if U is a convex polyhedron. If U is convex then every point in U is an interior point. A: Note that a convex hull is an open convex set. Let $W\subset \mathbb R^n$ be convex and open, and let $w\in W$ be an interior point. Then there is some open $\varnothing eq V\subset W$ such that $w\in V$. Let $\varnothing eq U\subset V$ be an open ball containing w. Since V is open, so is U, so U is a convex set. Furthermore, we can choose U to be an open ball,
