What's new:

in Its Proper Perspective Ellwood Finch The Battle of Fort Sumter, the first shot fired in the secession crisis, took place on April 12, 1861. To this day, it is widely regarded as one of the most senseless engagements in American military history. It proved that although Lincoln had been elected, he could not force the Southern states, known collectively as the Confederacy, to join the Union. Within 14 months, the Confederacy was composed of five states: Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Kentucky. Another two slaveholding states, Arkansas and Louisiana, entered the Confederate ranks; Missouri never did so. By the time Lincoln issued the order to fire on Fort Sumter, he had taken some positive steps to redeem himself from the debacle he had inflicted on himself in the presidential election. An election held at the time of the secession crisis, with the issue of the right of secession itself on the ballot, would inevitably have given the seceding states a majority in the Electoral College. Moreover, it would have postponed Lincoln's inauguration for several weeks until the election results were known. This delay would have given Lincoln some time to alter the course of the civil war; he would not have been forced into a rushed Union war and the Confederate high command, headed by the aristocratic and reactionary Simon Bolivar Buckner of Tennessee, would not have been so soon obliged to flee, leaving the field of battle to General Ulysses S. Grant.¹ The issue of the right of secession raged so hotly that the presidential campaign of 1860 was longer than the one of 1944.³ Contrary to many contemporary accounts, there was no rioting on the streets of the North and West after Lincoln was re-elected.⁴ No one questioned the fact that he had been elected. As expected, the South demanded that all Southern states be allowed the same right enjoyed by the North. The equivalent of a general strike in the South was a boycott of Northern goods and crops by both the planters and the farmers.⁵ Meanwhile, the South was preparing for war. An industrialist at Richmond published an illustrated paper, the _Southern Confederacy,_ to drum up support for the Confederacy, and the first public demonstrations against the federal government in support of states' rights were held in Charleston on March 8 and 12, 1861.6 To inflame passions further, Northern businessmen had no choice but to exclude Southern cotton. Within 36 hours of South Carolina's passage of a resolution seceding from the Union on March 9

We want to build a game which is about music, emotions, and social issues. The only requirement is that the game is about emotional attachment to a main character. Story: In this game the player will be a 19 years old college student. He lives in the middle of nowhere. He was born in the old country and then moved to the west when he was 15 years old. He entered college 3 years ago but his life is the same as all other. He still lives with parents, he is still studying, he plays basketball and he is an emo. Emo Simulator Description This game gives you an ability to feel yourself an emo. The character's story is that he is a 19 years old college student who decides to make an emo-band to express his feelings through art. The game was inspired by Beyond: Two Souls, Life is Strange, and films of Zvyagintsev and Bykov. We plan to have dialogues, plot, cutscenes and interactive movie style cameras. This is a plot-based game, by subculture developers, for subculture players. By this project we want to tribute to emo culture which we appreciate, we want o create something, relatively relatively (to other emo games) quality about Emo, a one-stop game for all emos, a game that would become a part of this culture's legacy. We want raise important social issues in this game, like an issue of unmotivated aggression towards people who are different from main population and what it leads to. Disclaimer: The game may discuss death/suicide-related topics, but does not provide in-game option to do it, and does not approve it. We state it clear: we are against suicide, please do not do it.
