Q: Why is my object being deleted, even though

I haven't called delete? I am having a problem trying to fix a piece of code that is malfunctioning, the basic idea is, make a struct to contain a std::string and make an object for that struct (nObject with std::string m_sName;, nObject vObject = nObject("Macintosh", "1984");). After this, assign a vObject reference to a std::vector< nObject> m_vVec; m_vVec is then initialised to be an empty vector, and instead of pushing vObjects to it (m_vVec.push_back(vObject)) it is popped from the vector repeatedly and deleted, resulting in nothing being in the vector when anything new is pushed into it. Unwanted behaviour, I know, but I'm trying to work out the cause of it, which is proving difficult.

The code in question is this: #include #include #include using namespace std; struct nObject { nObject(const string &sName, const string &sYear) : m_sName(sName), m_sYear(sYear) { } string m_sName; string m_sYear; }; int main() { vector < nObject> m_vVec; nObject vObject = nObject("Macintosh", "1984"); m_vVec.push_back(vObject); vObject = nObject("Apple", "2006"); m_vVec.push_back(vObject);
