Category:Windows-only software Category:Compact disc If you want to get really sick, you may have to wait a while. (I can't think of anything that would make someone more sick than getting on a bus) A University of Washington study finds that the risk of getting sick drops when a bus gets off the road and waits for the next bus instead of just taking off, like you might in an emergency. By waiting for a bus to come along, you lose less than one hour of your time. Take that into consideration, when you're deciding whether to skip that rest stop or hospital visit. A study in 2004 found that bus riders generally don't take fewer than seven rides per year. A study in 2000 found that bus riders have a higher rate of hospitalization because they are more likely to be obese and smoke cigarettes, but that their rate of death is not affected by the number of bus rides. About 30.2 million bus rides take place annually in the United States, according to the federal government, an average of about 18 trips each. Through Sunday, the economy is down about 0.3%, and the volume of public transportation options is up by 2.1% through Sept. 26, according to the American Public Transportation Association. It's part of the slow recovery, which is slowing due to the airline industry getting more shutdown and government programs shutting down. WASHINGTON (AP) — The government is projecting the economy will grow at a robust rate of 4.4% in the final three months of the year, on top of last year's 3.1%. Economists say it will be the fastest 3-month gain in two years, rising from a surprising 1.2% in the January-March period. In making the forecast, the government assumes that Congress 595f342e71
