I tried changing the subsampling from from around 8 to 16. Now the size of the file is around 3.5 MB and the time taken to render the image looks like its some 35 FPS. I would be grateful if you can help me understand the issue. Thanks in Advance A: Your GPU renders slowly because of either: Wrong settings Lack of video memory (GRID=1) Wrong software First of all, I want to make clear that a GeForce GTX 1070 with 2048 MB VRAM can render anything with proper settings, be it a.PNG or a.PSD file, even with a 2048x2048 pixels. You said you're rendering a 4096x4096 pixels image, so it should be possible with proper settings. In my opinion the more obvious problem is because of lack of memory. You mention that your 4GB VRAM is full. But if this problem is not solved, then a second more not-so-obvious problem will happen. I can't tell you what's wrong, because it's hard for me to know what settings/software you use, and because there can be many possible problems. If you want to support: Windows 7 will need 8 GB RAM Wine needs at least 3 GB VRAM, and at least 8 GB RAM, 3GB per window Photoshop needs a minimum of 6 GB VRAM, and at least 12 GB RAM (and if you want to know why, check this question) your GPU can render thousands and thousands of pixels per second your GPU is an NVIDIA GPU (because AMDs can handle fine (sort of) resolutions, but they are less effective) you don't need to use the most recent version of Windows you're not writing a game you don't have a problem with the software's settings, and you don't mind reading the manual you want to support NVIDIA GPUs (otherwise you'd be using the AMD GPU as I said) What we can try: Use GRID to at least 4 (instead of 1) Use CUDA (instead of OpenCL) Right now I have no idea how to set these settings, but here's how I want them to be: 1. CUDA CUDA is supported by many GPUs, but in my experience it's best with NVIDIA. OpenCL is supported by AMD GPUs, but you don't need the most e79caf774b

I've recently started to make an application, and I've gotten some free time to make it work. I've set up the GUI, and after a lot of work (not to mention errors), I've made the game playable. It's a platformer, with several levels in which the player must solve various puzzles. The application is designed in Qt 4.8, so I'm using QFileDialog to select a file. This works without a hitch. However, there is one thing that bothers me, and that's the extension. I'm taking the path of minimalism, and I don't want the player to be forced to select a file from a set of standard, predefined extensions. Instead, I want the user to select whatever she wants. But, what happens when the user doesn't know what extension a file has? This is an important problem, because most people don't know what an extension is. Is there an easy way to work around this problem? A: There are however a
