We studied the expression of genes important for the proper embryonic development of the nervous system and the musculoskeletal and cardiovascular systems in certain patients with a recently recognized syndrome of optic nerve malformation (ONM) of early onset, including microphthalmia, optic nerve hypoplasia, and mandibular hypoplasia, in combination with myopathy and congenital heart disease. Reverse transcription-polymerase chain reaction (RT-PCR) followed by Southern blotting was performed on RNA extracted from the following tissues: heart, kidney, skin, skeletal muscle, liver, eye, and brain. In all of the patients studied, we detected in the brain the presence of a truncated transcript of the Pericentrin 1 (PCNT1) gene, suggesting the presence of a genetic defect in this disease. In all of the patients studied, we detected a mutation in the fetal liver kinase 2 (FLK2) gene, accounting for the myopathy. Our findings provide a basis for future studies investigating the role of these genes in the development of diseases of the heart, kidney, and other organs. 406 So.2d 113 (1981) Ex parte George A. Dome field is typical of the type of dome field that overlies the contact zone between two different volcanic systems, like the type of dome field that overlies the margin of a magma chamber inside Yellowstone National Park. Lava domes are the piles of erupted lava that remain on a volcano's flanks after lava has solidified. They form as lava pours out of a vent or lava channel and cools into a thicker structure than the surrounding lava, then builds up in layers atop each other. Depending on the duration of the eruption, lava domes can grow to several hundred feet in height. Lava dome growth is relatively rapid, with the largest are growing at a rate of more than a foot per year. Once the lava dome has built up sufficiently, it can erupt explosively, dumping lava hundreds of feet into the air. The current tallest lava dome in the world is Seamus (Eastern Plume Complex) at the U.S.
