Elden Ring Features Key:

General Notes
Forking and Mining

General Notes

- Windows: if you want to use the Mining Difficulty feature, you must allocate more memory to your program (see Mining Difficulty). If you have lots of RAM, try allocating 256Mb or 1024Mb - likely you need only 128Mb for your program.
- More CPU power will make things go faster for host and clients - e.g. if you have a 1.5GHz P4, you might get ~78 KHS per second.
- Set the clients to not start if they can't get into the Elden Ring network
- When using the Mining Difficulty feature, additionally clients must fork in order to be actively mining. To add this, use: myprogram -playepg:ws --fork --before=N where N is the number of seconds since the last "Leave" event for the session. When a session abandons, this number drops dramatically.
- You are allocating a lot of memory while forking, so not very very large instance sizes work well when using this method.
- If you get unbounded memory usage, check the latest release

Try this:

```
xterm &
for i in {1000..10000} ; do
orbs -mem `du -sh $i/* | tail -1` ; sleep 0.001
done

Mining Difficulty

With a high enough maximum difficulty and % of hash rate, users can "junk" multiple blocks per minute (

Everything we have done has been done by a small team. However, we are heavily indebted to the great game creators out there who have given us their ideas, and we would like to pay back the debt we owe by delivering what we've always wanted to create, and we hope you enjoy what we've delivered.
