Q: Is it possible to predict the success of a naive Bayes classifier? Is it possible to train a naive Bayes classifier based on a set of labeled training data, then predict the success (or lack of success) of a test set once the classifier has been "trained"? I.e., given a set of labeled training data, is it possible to train the classifier to make predictions for a set of test data? In other words, is it possible to use a naive Bayes classifier as a probabilistic regression model? A: No. Naive Bayes classifiers work by estimating the likelihood of each class given the training data. You can think of the likelihood of a class for a data point as the probability of seeing that point, given that class. If you are given a new data point, you can evaluate this likelihood and classify the point accordingly. Naive Bayes classifiers do not generalize to new data. Regression models, on the other hand, work by evaluating the likelihood of a data point being in any arbitrary class given all the training data. Consisting of ribs of beef wrapped in banana leaves, with various seasonings, including white onion, garlic, orange peel, tomato, and vinegar, this dish is typically served in large platters and eaten with a fork and knife. Q: How to launch a new.xib with the same storyboard and main source code but with my own array of nibs? I'm currently designing the main interface of my app. I have a main.storyboard with a UINavigationController and a UITabBarController with 4 tabs to load the different views. On one of the tab I have a button that navigates to a new view (called SettingsViewController) I have written all the view controllers of the new view in a new.xib and I made sure the view controllers of this new xib and the original view controllers are set to load the same storyboard by using the "embed" relationship for the xibs (see image below). Now I'm ready to navigate to the new view with the button, but I don't know if there is a way to load the new xib with the same storyboard but instead use a different array of nibs. I've looked at the solution to this problem here, but it's for 3 nibs. I'm looking for a solution that loads the same storyboard but with different arrays of xibs. Thank you! A: I think what you have in mind is to load a XIB containing a NIB into a UIView subclass which is loaded from a XIB containing a XIB. It's not possible to load the same storyboard, but if you keep the same source code then it's possible to do this. You can load a nib-file like the following by using a UINib: NSArray *nib = [[NSBundle mainBundle] loadNibNamed:@"SettingsViewController" owner:self options:nil]; UIView *view = [nib objectAtIndex:0]; This is not what you are looking for, however, because you have more than one view. I suggest you to read the documentation on UINib and NIB, in particular the part "Using NIB Files to Create Classes" This couple is wed, but they still make time for each other This quote was shared on Instagram by young couple Isabella Pabalan and David Lacaspain. The caption said, “We’re so blessed. We still embrace each other, still talk, still spend time together, still make an effort to create
