About us

The team behind the project is made of me and my friend Bulat,

We teamed up about 4 years ago and worked together on commercial games,

Together we create this...

We suppose to be called ExAbort, due to Bulat's hard English, but not sure.

We are working on new project since then, but for now it is still too early to tell what it will be.

If you know who we are, please let us know!

* Facebook: * Flickr: * Twitter: * Website: * YouTube: How to defeat your enemy The Aliens on the map Melon dusk is a very aggressive enemy. Try to avoid contact to use their weakness on their arms. How to defeat your enemy: - Place two traps - Cover the traps with a body. Keep the body overlap the traps, but it should not touch them. - After a few shots, you will use the trap to kill the aliens. - Carry the trap to another alien enemy. - Repeat until all the aliens are dead. Survival Tips - Keep your weapon capacity to a minimum of 2 bullets and ammunition - Always keep an eye on your stock of bullets, this can cause you to get stranded in very dangerous or difficult situations. - Never use more than 2 traps at once. - Use ammo bonuses to cover more distance About this game: In the not too distant future, humanity is faced with the frightening prospect of life without electricity, food or water. The only power that keeps the lights on, the TV on and the fridge running are the so-called weapons of terror - lethal, undetectable missile-launchers that can strike anywhere, at anytime. The science and technology sector is the first to suffer, losing its privileged status. Soon, almost all of us are going to be living in underground cities called superblocks, protected by our personal armies of remotely controlled androids. Science-fiction has never been so real... It is the year 2040. The world has turned into a much different place, the air is unbreathable, the food is too expensive and the government controls all of it. The military dictatorship is ever-growing and extends it's reach beyond the country's borders. Citizens are less and less able to express their opinions and live in fear for their lives. The future is coming and it is a lot different from the one we thought. An alien ship of a new, hostile race appears out of nowhere and... People wonder: Are we alone in the universe? GameObject: A

What's new in Death Waves:

Expected In West, Caucuses Too Unusual weather, food scarcity and ongoing political conflicts pose the greatest risk to East Asia and the Middle East, the new 2014-15 Global Risk Report by The Institute of International Finance has warned.

Elsewhere, South Asia is taking in immigrants and remittances from the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) countries, and Latin American risk is driven by the Mexican peso crisis and the Central American Regional Security Initiative that is meant to help secure the region's borders. China stands out as an outlier on all measures. "This year's report will be particularly interesting as it covers the first year in which China's exchange rate has depreciated and become a bigger risk factor for EM risk than Europe's debt crisis," says Zane Wang, a director at the institute. "They've become a bigger risk factor than Europe simply because they've become big enough that there's a very high chance they could spark a real currency crisis in China and the resultant flash crash could be a lot more severe." The turmoil in China is highlighting concerns about Beijing's adherence to its austerity-driven budget blueprint, which looks set to be widely implemented in 2015. In recent years, there have been growing signs of discontent over the government's economic policies, which are tightly linked to its push to reduce the nation's large trade surplus, and are seen as stifling growth. Globally, the report points to the outlook as well as the high relative vulnerabilities across important markets. In what becomes a pattern, Southeast Asia is the least comfortable where loss of investor confidence could lead to crisis or political turmoil. Vietnam and Myanmar come a close second and third, while East Asia trails in both concerns over instability and loss of investor confidence. "Regionally we're as crowded on the upside as we are crowded on the downside," says Wang. "Coinciding with that is the fact that the macro investment environment and inflation are both coming under pressure right now." In Latin America, the buoyancy of commodities stemming from China's slowing economy is set to keep pressure on the peso, while Mexico is seen as taking on most of the mounting Central American security guard's bill. "Caribbean-style growing pains" While that area is watching the
