dialogues for schools, parents and teachers that offer a critical approach to cinema with documentaries and animated features. Each dialogues for video addresses a different theme: the education of young people, knowledge of cinema and television, global citizenship, love of culture and social inclusion. Each dialogue is developed as a web-based video channel where the main purpose is to offer teachers educational media content, media production training, and a space for schools and parents to exchange their views with one another. More than a website, DialoguesForVideo offers digital content for teachers and students who want to learn to communicate, watch and be able to contribute their points of view online.

Feeding preferences of very low birth weight infants in Taipei. To compare the feeding preferences of very low birth weight (VLBW) infants and to evaluate the relationship between nursing and eating problems during the first year of life. Prospective longitudinal study. Seventy-three VLBW infants delivered between November 1999 and August 2000 in the Maternity and Child Care Hospital of National Taiwan University Hospital. Subjects were divided into those who were not included in a feeding protocol (n=15) and those who were included (n=58). Infants were examined at 1, 6 and 12 months postnatally and were classified as having a poor weight gain, poor satiety, failure to thrive, abnormal food intake and eating disorder. Regression analysis was used to investigate the relationship between feeding preferences and birth weight and feeding problems. Among the VLBW infants who were not included in the feeding protocol, the most common feeding problem at 1 month was a poor weight gain (50%), followed by poor satiety (33%), feeding disorder (14%), failure to thrive (5%) and eating disorder (4%).

Only 2% of the VLBW infants who were not included in the feeding protocol had abnormal food intake. A poor weight gain at 1 month predicted eating disorder at 6 and 12 months, whereas feeding disorder at 1 month predicted abnormal food intake at 6 months. For the infants included in the feeding protocol, food intake disorder was the most common feeding problem at 1 month (52%), followed by poor satiety (29%), eating
