This is the first Hidden-Object Puzzle Adventure, created with the purpose of discovering parallel worlds from different eras. You look for a crazy trip to distant time-spaces through time portals. There are three time-worlds: Arcalium, Atlantis, and parallel world. You can change them using magic lines connecting them. The game involves using the skills of a character named Myrthos to discover the disappearance of your niece. You must find the aid of the parallel world to find out what happened to her and her expedition. In the parallel world, you will be able to meet your own past and even your twin brother, who you never knew existed! To complete the game, you have to use resources and plants in the three worlds. When using plants, you must first learn their corresponding names in each world. Then, you have to gather the pollen to complete a level. You can get it from flowers growing in Arcalium or the Atlantis, or even a parallel world if you have the proper connecting line with it. Each world has special plants that can help you solve puzzles, and collect items. If you complete all the puzzles in a level, you will be able to enter the next. The game features more than 40 levels, with a number of unique names for all the environments. You must solve various puzzles to find your niece. Use your skills and plant collection to find her! The Collector's Edition includes: Immerse yourself in the world of flowers and magic, and experience the parallel worlds of reality! Set out on a crazy trip to distant time-spaces through time portals. There are three time-worlds: Arcalium, Atlantis, and the parallel world. You can change them using magic lines connecting them. Discover that your niece is missing in Greenland and has disappeared in another world. Explore the parallel worlds of Atlantis, the undersea world and the extra-ordinary world. Find out what happened to her in each of them. Lend a hand in Arcalium and help your twin brother who disappeared mysteriously long ago. Explore the parallel worlds and have fun! The Hex is an upcoming, action-strategy game in development by Entwined, from a core team of former Vigil artists, including Sean Hurley, producer of the Silent Hill series.

One of the main concerns I had when designing the original "Vicious Galaxy" was how to make it feel as if you were actually inside the ship. We wanted to convey the scale and vastness of the universe without making the player feel too small or overwhelmed by the scale. I'm sure this is a problem that other game developers have faced as well. Back in the days when we were developing Superbrothers: Sword and Sworcery EP, we often wanted to get a sense of scale in certain places, either to communicate to the player the size of certain objects or to show off some cool detail in the environment.

For "Vicious Galaxy," I wanted to apply this concept to the massive universe on the game's title screen. Up until then we had the default "stretchy"-looking GUI background with the hex-like grid on it. As soon as the title screen was loaded, I wanted to have a proper faux-3D environment. With a tile-based engine, it was a piece of cake. I just had to load a tilemap, stretch it out, and then run it in conjunction with a simple renderer.

One of the tiles I eventually ended up making is the actual first tilemap you are presented with. I didn't have any specific background in mind when I designed this. I was just having a blast making all sorts of tiles. To me, this was the truest form of art. I wasn't making anything along these lines before, so I was just curious as to what I would end up making. When viewed with a print engine, I was actually surprised at how well the result turned out.

I ended up making a total of 8 tilemaps. Each tile and the surrounding region had a specific look and feel to it.

It's the year 2200. Nova Prime is a world-renowned provider of intergalactic travel for over 500 years. But on a routine mission to the planet Udon, we discover that this was a military hideout where a group of prisoners were being held in extreme isolation. Along with a number of other rescue missions, we have to either free them, or stay and observe their mission while they're free. Among them we find Tanya, a girl who has endured hell on the isolated planet. Luckily for her, she seems to have found the one person who can take her away from all that... Features: - 2 upgrade systems. The first to be unlocked is the Shield/Sword mastery system, which allows you to take control of the shield and sword. The second one is the Movement system, which allows you to teleport. - Combat system that works more like a puzzle. You can play as your character or as your weapon. The other characters can be upgraded with powers, which are activated by the correct button inputs. For example, if you wanna summon a power, you hit the space bar. You can also use the D-pad to control your character, for example to do a dash, or to close your shield. - A whole lot of powers, coming in several sizes and for different purposes. You can affect your opponent directly, or even change the state of the environment around him. - An overworld map that you can explore and visit the locations that are playable on the other characters. - A conversation system where you can give hints and guide your character through the story. - 2 play modes: Casual and Score. Casual is best for the short game, and Score is best for long-time. - 2 difficulty settings: Easy and Hard. Easy comes with the option to auto-lock your shield, while in Hard you can't use any shield at all. - Animations. Since we wanted to take advantage of the Dualshock 4 controller, we have used an animator to bring the characters to life. Heroku is the dev name. What's new:

rabbit Racer Jetpack Jackrabbit Racer is an episodic freeware racing game based on the characters JetPack Jellyfish and Jack Rabbit who originally appeared in Nintendo's 1986 arcade game, Super Mario Bros.: The Lost Levels. In this release the characters are employed to fight bosses in levels. Also feature some vintage NES games. How the game is played is very simple. The player races through various levels and boss stages at high speed. The player can accelerate to speed and avoid the effects of collisions along the way. Points are awarded based on speed and picking up power-ups. Playable characters Each playable character in Jetpack Jackrabbit Racer has their own set of moves, gimmicks, and weaponry: Jet Pack Jellyfish: Her primary attack is to ram into enemies, leaving blue flames in her wake. This attack can be enhanced by consuming power-ups such as invincibility potions, white ones that will stop slowing down the motorcycle and red ones that will increase her speed. The player can also get green fire to act as grenades which can be better designed for certain situations, such as climbing a wall. She can also throw up a small mini-gun-like turret from her back, called the Jellyfish Cannon. Jack Rabbit: When racing in this game it can be beneficial to clutch the handlebars, as small glitches can sometimes cause the motorcycle to flip over, resulting in the rider losing their balance and skidding off the track. He can also fire a punch-like projectile. Jetventure: Originally planned to be an assist character for the player, Jetventure can intercept and then fire a rocket at targets. He can also fly; and by using a hovercraft, he becomes invincible. These attacks become even more helpful in the second game where he gives the player an Infernopus missile for an easy final level boss fight. Storyline The story starts with some introduction of the world in which Jetpack Jackrabbit Racer exists. It is a place made up of surreal ruins and twisted, technological abominations. The player eventually starts off fighting monsters from reality, such as incompetent police, UFOs and garbage. The player encounters the evil Drug Lord and in the second episode makes a boss-fight with him along the way. The player also gets to know his enemies and allies. Episode 1: Wolfashine (30 points) It all starts on top of a tall mountain. It is the site for a military test that is

This is a VR game extension to WHMIS 2015. It takes a learner to a virtual world where a industrial robot is supervised by a human. This robot serves as the “teacher” in the game, guiding players as they use safe practices to clean up contamination and disaster areas. WHMIS 2015 started out as a tutorial to teach how to properly handle items so they are not contaminated. The game is designed to play like a self-contained course where a learner can test his or her knowledge and skills in the game. Because of the complexity of the course, we developed a virtual version of the course which takes the learner in a new and challenging environment for testing and learning. Virtual Reality training has been proven to help build real-life skills and prepare workers for the types of situations they may encounter in their workplaces. Key Benefits: - Virtual Reality introduces a new learning experience by immersing a learner in a virtual world where an industrial robot is supervised by a human - Immersive learning allows a learner to be in the game as if it were real - Designed to test skill with practice time that can be modified, from 5 to 30 minutes - Can be used for corporate training or education in a classroom setting - VR game is always available for free for all players - The game includes tutorials to help the player learn all of the functions of the game and the required WHMIS training to complete the game - The game includes bonus fun facts, videos and images - The game can be turned into a virtual reality experience for your computer, mobile device, or OBS! Development Team: - Philip Paulson (Developer) - Daniel Gartman (Developer) - Maiream Wong (Developer) - Jordi Longobardo (Producer) - Antonio Siouti (Developer) - Martin Gros (Producer) - Patrick Chateau (Director) - Allan Matheson (Director) - Erin Levy (Director) - Kameron Morris (Director) - Stephane Jacob (Director) A: When I start off playing this game the first thing that happens is that it draws my attention to things that I would have thought of as the players are just as important as the character in this game. E.G - If the character cannot handle a product there is always another player that can. If a players product is contaminated there are always other players
