The city recently applied for the permits for the $46 million project to add 300,000 square feet to the 2.5 million square feet of office, hotel and retail space already in the downtown area. Officials said they want to make the 2nd and Washington streets area an attraction to visitors and residents. Officials say the plan would make it "a new landmark in downtown Indianapolis." But the plan has drawn some attention for its proposed use of concrete pillars as a guide for visitors as they head up and down to the new indoor beach. Lawyer Ed Lamm, who plans to protest the design change, said the pillars would be a "scar for Indianapolis." "The parking garage is now built in the middle of a thriving downtown neighborhood and it is a bit jarring and is going to be a blight on the landscape," Lamm said. A public hearing for the plan is scheduled for Jan. 23 at the Indianapolis Design Center, 1400 Pennsylvania Street, where the public will be able to comment and see the project.Q: Vertical spacing - proportional size The image below shows the result of the following code: \documentclass[11pt]{article} \usepackage{mathtools} \usepackage{amsthm}
