"The Motion Gauge combines real-life, high-intensity data with precise player intelligence to power FIFA's gameplay," said Stefan Hofmann, Senior Producer for FIFA. "Using this technology, players can shoot at times and pressures of the match more accurately and powerfully. Players have more control over their shots and the stability of the football and its movements are more realistic. The shot for shot relationship is more fluent. We have also improved the control over the run and the vertical leap of players." In-game demonstrations will showcase the advances on FIFA 21 while the new-generation Motion Gauge technology gives players a closer look at what would happen to the ball. The Motion Gauge is affected by conditions on the pitch, the skill level of players, quality of movement, angles of attack and so on. The integration of the new technology is a testament to the level of innovation coming from FIFA. The PDS is a structure within the FIFA video game series that allows players to customise their player by understanding how they physically grow. Players can unlock new skills and attributes to enhance their performance on the field. Over the course of one season, FIFA offers the player various PDS categories with the starting point being the position that they were at the end of their last season. Players will choose a manual or auto upgrade and continue on through the different categories. How can I improve my Player Rating?
