The Wacom tablet for Photoshop washes out in the sun, so it is best used indoors or on a cloudy day.

Photo illustration artists use Wacom tablets for most of their work. Selecting a Photoshop File Type After you determine that you want to work with digital images, you need to decide which file type to use. Photoshop CS5 supports the following file types: JPEG (Joint Photographic Experts Group): An archival format that makes JPEGs run faster on your system by compressing the image. TIFF (Tagged Image File Format): Creates a file that's a hybrid of JPEG and TIFF. You can make the decision to use a proprietary file type or the standard TIFF or JPEG. If you opt to use Photoshop, you need to be aware of the trade-offs you need to make between image quality and speed. Photoshop CS5 uses TIFF (see Figure 17-1) by default. Photoshop can open images of either type for editing. Use either file type, but some shortcuts can provide immediate advantages to an image. For example, JPGs tend to have lower compression, so they work quickly in low-speed computers. FIGURE 17-1: If you choose to use Photoshop, make sure to add the Image Type option in the Window menu (left). If you're using Photoshop for the first time and aren't sure which file type to use, click the New Document icon from the File menu. Doing so gives you the opportunity to select the type of file you want to work with, as shown in Figure 17-2. FIGURE 17-2: Select Image Type before you start working on your image. Working with File Formats After you choose which file type you want to work with, you need to make sure that your image is saved in the right format. The following format settings and practices work for most image types: Use a Photoshop File Formats option (File⇒Place) to make sure the file type and settings of your new file are correct. Save your files with TIFF (Tagged Image File Format). Set the Image Type to TIFF if you made a JPEG file. Open a JPEG (Joint Photographic Experts Group) file in Photoshop. Choose Image⇒Image Size. From the Image Size menu, choose 5×7 or 3×6.

Protease-activated receptors--very smart cell receptors. Protease-activated receptors (PAR) constitute a novel family of G-protein coupled receptors characterized by a specific membrane topology. Their activation by proteases results in the release of a new extracellular fragment, (tethered ligand (TL), capable of further activating intracellular pathways. PAR are expressed in a wide variety of tissues, and in different pathologic processes such as cardiovascular and thrombotic diseases, infections, or cancer, where they may play important roles as therapeutic targets. Recent findings shed new light on the physiological role of PAR and provide additional insights in the pathophysiology of PAR signaling.

Babelean Wall Babelean Wall was a Roman fort in the town centre of Brough, East Ayrshire, Scotland, in the Roman province of Britannia, which is roughly centred on York, England. The fort was built in approximately AD 70-80 to defend a Roman road that traversed from Brough to New Kilpatrick. The fort is known for being one of only two buildings to stand over the site of the Roman forts in the vicinity of Brough. It is designated a scheduled ancient monument by Historic Environment Scotland.

Identification The fort was found during routine housing work that began in the 1950s. It lies near the central running track of the Glasgow Road Industrial Estate (GWIE). This area was part of the Port Askaig estate, a working-class area named after a local village. The nearby Daerres Castle in the town also has some architectural similarities. The surrounding area was once woodland before being taken over by farming. The remains of the fort are some way away from the active settlement. There is no archaeological investigation into the site so little is known about it, but it was discovered during housing excavations in the area in 1950. The Scottish Ironwork Heritage Trust and the Glasgow Museum of Transport were involved. Excavations consisted of a trench measuring 33 feet long, 4.5 feet wide and 7.5 feet deep.

Location Babelean Wall is situated a few miles east of Brough on the roadside of the main road between Glasgow and Broughton. The nearest major settlement is New Kilpatrick, which lies just to the south of Brough. The fort was one of the many strongholds built to guard the Roman road through the area. The road itself must have been very important, connecting the towns
