The development of radiocarbon and carbon-14 analyses on two samples taken from the 3H-rich calcified deposits in the wine cave of Herculaneum, southern Italy, during preliminary studies of the overall project is reported. A comparison with available reference material indicates that both samples may date to the first half of the Christian era. On the basis of the experimental errors and the daily influx of beta-particles of carbon-14 during the field work, the conservative limits on the radiocarbon and carbon-14 assays on the selected samples are estimated, and they are discussed in a wider context. The results indicate that the deposits analyzed may not have been significantly affected by the 3H-rich postdepositional process.[Antiviral screening of Chinese herbs using viral plaque reduction assay]. To establish the method for the antiviral screening of Chinese herbs. Viral plaque reduction assay was used to evaluate the antiviral activity of various Chinese herbal extracts against hemorrhagic fever with renal syndrome (HFRS) virus, TBF virus and Japanese encephalitis virus. The 50% effective dose (ED(50)) of the drug to the test viruses was in the range of 10.0 microg/mL-1.2 mg/mL. By qualitative assay, the results of the HEK cell culture system by pretreatment with herbal extracts showed that the total effective rate of the virus infection was 100% when the cells were pretreated with high and middle concentration of extracts.
