Improved spermine uptake kinetics in a renal cell line: evidence for multiple spermine transport sites. Spermine (SP) and spermidine (SPD) uptake kinetics were examined in an established cell line, DKDMG-2, derived from monkey kidneys. SP uptake into the cell exhibited saturable kinetics with a Km of 8.6 microM and a Vmax of 11.6 nmol/10(6) cells/min. SPD uptake also exhibited saturable kinetics with a Km of 10.5 microM and a Vmax of 27.1 nmol/10(6) cells/min. Specific transporter inhibitors (d-cycloserine, desipramine, and pyridoxal-5-phosphate) and disruption of cell membrane integrity by digitonin decreased the overall uptake of SP and SPD by 65%. Steady state uptake studies with a physiological concentration of SP (100 microM) revealed a low-affinity component (Km = 2.8 mM) as well as a high-affinity component (Km = 1.7 microM). The low-affinity component was saturable with a Vmax of 4.0 nmol/10(6) cells/min. The high-affinity component appeared to be nonsaturable with a Vmax of approximately 5.0 nmol/10(6) cells/min. These studies demonstrate that DKDMG-2 cells express multiple SP transport sites that function at different concentrations of SP. SP uptake by these cells may be necessary for intracellular redistribution of SP for maintenance of normal cellular function.Attorneys that are not expert in particular subject matter may be referred to as attorneys outside the subject matter. An experienced outside attorney can be a great asset to a law firm's representation of a client. The outside attorney can provide insight into new areas of law and can research legal issues that typically are not within the expertise of an in-house attorney. Outside attorneys can be expensive and, therefore, the costs associated with outside attorneys must be justified by the value associated with their services. Thus, law firms routinely seek to save costs by retaining an outside attorney to assist an in-house attorney. However, it is not always economically feasible to retain an outside attorney. In addition, there may be limitations on the outside attorney's ability to provide assistance to the in-house attorney. For example, the outside attorney may not have expertise in all aspects
