The Huawei Honor 6X BLN-L21 is Now on Indian Market. After a near-death experience I've been to a doctors with my 2 year old daughter and his doctor have insisted that it's incurable. So, yes, it's incurable but the medication that he's on doesn't make it so serious or even life threatening. I don't think the old illness left any lasting damage. I'm still trusting that everything is ok. When I took her to be examined she was a very, very sick child. She threw up constantly for months and she had liquid poop everywhere. It was so disgusting, it is a nightmare to clean up. Recently when I took her to the doctors she fell so hard she landed on her head and I don't remember anything after that. We know the doctors but in the end we are paying for it. I'm also paying for the two rabies shots when I go back later this month and for the blood work and a reflex test. Does anyone have a similar experience and if so, did you manage to get over it with your child.

_____ - I would stay home and eat cold pizza all day and listen to Alice in Chains. - I don't remember anything as I know it wasn't a near death experience. The doctor said that the medication I was on had been caused my the illness and it had healed her. My husband and I don't think that it causes any lasting damage but I have read that it could. I don't have any lasting damage either. I think that if you have a child with colic it is going to be very hard as they will not understand what is happening and are going to be very worried. Colic can be so hard as you can never get them to sleep and they will have problems while eating and sleeping. I don't think that I will ever be able to sleep again but I guess you get over that. I would highly recommend looking into colic as I am convinced that it was due to colic. However, a "near death experience" as described by you cannot cause lifelong complications. It has been said that it is incurable. That is not true. My daughter was very healthy. Thank you both so much for your support and advice. I'm glad that I can count on you guys. I have read that it could be hereditary and have that being said I was watching a youtube video on it and the
