In a new review, researchers from Imperial College London and University of Edinburgh suggest that, to counteract obesity, one could try training the immune system to recognise fat as a food source. For years, it has been known that an individual's nutritional status can affect immune function. However, new research carried out by the universities suggests that this may be a two-way relationship - the body itself can affect the immune system too. The research found that fat cells, which are part of the immune system, release adiponectin, a hormone that promotes immune cell survival. This triggers an insulin response, which activates fat cells. The research paper, which is published in Nature Immunology, explains that "this causes peripheral metabolic and systemic insulin resistance." In other words, for the most part, a person's nutritional status can affect the immune system. "How a person' 0cc13bf012

We recognize the impact your generosity makes on our children, and on the children of others. Please consider making a tax-deductible gift today. The Jewish Federation of Greater Oklahoma City's Volunteer Service Awards recognize volunteers who are willing to lend their time and talents to help our organization. Candidates are nominated and voted upon at the JAFCA Board of Directors meetings in Spring.

1. Field of the Invention The present invention is directed to a method of manufacture of SiC exhibiting a high electrical conductivity in the lateral direction in contrast to the vertical direction. The present invention is further directed to a method of manufacture of a semiconductor device, a semiconductor device and an electronic device having a high-performance semiconductor component comprising a semiconductor substrate having the same impurity concentration.

2. Description of the Background Art SiC is a compound semiconductor material having a band gap wider than that of silicon or gallium arsenide. The wide band gap of SiC gives rise to the potential of manufacturing a semiconductor device operable at a high temperature. In addition, SiC substrate used in a semiconductor device is a hetero junction substrate of SiC and a III-V compound semiconductor material such as GaAs. In addition, SiC substrate is expected to find application as a substrate of a power device of a high temperature operation because of the high-breakdown voltage. The SiC substrates used in the conventional semiconductor devices are manufactured by subjecting a III-V compound semiconductor substrate such as a GaAs substrate to a direct-current plasma process. The electrical conductivity of a III-V compound semiconductor substrate is as low as about 500  $\times$   $10^9$   $\Omega$ -cm. When a III-V compound semiconductor substrate of this type is used as a
