Ploytec USB Audio Asio Driver Ver. 2.8.40 (32 64bit, W Serial)I1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to a system for the remote testing and diagnosis of a dynamoelectric machine while that machine is operating. More particularly, it relates to a system for the remote monitoring, recording and interpretation of machine electrical state parameters such as voltages, currents, power dissipation, and mechanical state parameters such as torque or vibration while that machine is in operation. 2. Description of the Prior Art The capability to remotely monitor and analyze the operation of a dynamoelectric machine in-situ while that machine is operating is useful in preventing machine damage and reducing maintenance costs. This remote monitoring and analyzing capability would also be particularly useful in the unmanned operation of dynamoelectric machines such as motors, generators, and transformers in systems such as in satellites, jet transport aircraft, and missiles. For such applications, the maintenance of the machine may be difficult because it is situated in a remote location. On the other hand, the simple necessity of monitoring the operation of such an assembly has led to the creation of diagnostic systems which use real time information gathered from a remote station to determine if a defect exists in the machine. These systems are typically referred to as "in-situ" systems since they monitor, diagnose and analyze an operating dynamoelectric machine while the machine is operating.

Which is the Phase I/II study of peplomycin in platinum-resistant ovarian cancer. This study was undertaken to assess the toxicity of peplomycin, a glycopeptide antibiotic currently under investigation, to clarify its maximum tolerated dose and to assess its clinical activity in advanced ovarian cancer resistant to platinum-based chemotherapy. Forty-eight women with measurable, platinum-resistant disease were entered into the study. Treatment consisted of one 5-day course of peplomycin. The course was repeated every 4 weeks, with a planned maximum of six courses. The starting dose of peplomycin was 6,000 International Units (IU) per dose, and this was to be escalated in successive cohorts of eight patients with the aim of determining a dose at which fatigue, a common side-effect of peplomycin, is not excessive. A major effect of peplomycin was myelosuppression; 18% of courses were complicated by dose-limiting thrombocytopenia. One patient had marrow aplasia; five additional patients developed transient thrombocytopenia of varying severity. One of the 11 evaluable patients achieved a partial response and another had a minor response. The median survival of all patients was 14 months from the start of peplomycin therapy; the median survival of the partial responders was 41+ months. Peplomycin produced severe myelosuppression, but this side-effect was not dose-limiting and no other untoward effects were observed. Peplomycin has activity in resistant ovarian cancer, and further exploration of this agent is warranted in phase II studies.#!/bin/bash # Usage: gnu-build-test set -e cd $${BUILD_ARTIFACTS}$
