Magazines and newspapers have to come up with ad placements that keep readers engaged and looking at the content for longer — and therefore, the most successful articles are those that are chock full of pictures (as opposed to just using text). For example, if you know that photos tend to increase engagement on Facebook by 80 percent, what's the correct ad placement? Research from Digg, a website that gathers news from across the Web, shows that Facebook posts with pictures averaged 1.4 times the amount of views as those with text. On the other hand, YouTube videos with text only got 3.7 times the views of videos with photos. And yet, studies have shown that video consumption on the internet continues to increase, reaching 1.3 billion unique users in 2014. To help you find the right amount of content for your ads, we're going to highlight the top 7 images for website content posts. See this post for more details. Remember, it can take a bit of trial and error to figure out the best images. Get to it! 1. View Count A view count is an approximate number of times your content was viewed. If you're using video content, use the time and date to estimate how many times the video has been viewed. Here's an example of a view count for a YouTube video: Top Videos From TimeSpan.com 2. Number of Comments A high number of comments can mean that people are talking about your content, and it's worth reading what they are saying. In fact, a high number of comments is usually a good sign! When commenting, try to be helpful and add value to the comments. Try commenting on other people's content. And don't be spammy — make sure your comment is relevant and actually adds to the conversation. Here's an example of a blog post with a lot of comments: 4. Events on Schedule If you're involved in organizing an event in your area, get on it! This is a great way to increase engagement with your audience. You can create or attend an event and post the event to your website with an image or video. With the right image, this can actually increase reach compared to posting a text-only description. See
