want my text in the file I'm writing in to be monospaced. That is, using a regular font, regular layout, no kerning, no ligatures, no hyphenation, etc. What I would like to do is to get rid of my Arabic (hebrew) and Cyrillic fonts, i.e. switch back to monospaced non-Arabic/non-Cyrillic fonts. I've tried switching to the default Times New Roman, but as soon as I use TextEdit, it automatically switches to Arabic or Cyrillic, and then it comes back to Times New Roman on a single save -- as soon as I save it again, it goes to monospaced again. What I want is for the font to stay monospaced even when I save it, even if I switch back to another font. How can I do this? Is there an easy way to get rid of the existing font, or will I have to manually set everything back up? A: Normally I don't answer questions so quickly, but this is a good case. You can set the appropriate language of the text from the Font Book using the "Language" setting. As far as I know that's the only way to do it. However, if you're having a problem with a single text-edit, you can choose Edit -> Convert -> To Current Text to get the settings from the current text. This will keep the fonts from switching back and forth. Additionally, if you press the "Done" button when choosing a new font, it will use the settings in that font.
