I Accept Cookies Privacy Policy Q: Xpath selector to read contents of text block I am struggling with an Xpath query to locate some text in a text block element and select it. Name Franz X With Descendant::* seems to work fine, but because we have multiple text blocks from different elements, we have to reference to their id to locate the text inside Descendant::*[contains(text(),'Name')] I would like a more generic solution like something like Descendant[hasOwnProperty('id')] The problem is that in combination with the tokenize() function the node test returns empty. A: An expression like "/descendant[contains(text(),'Name')]" will select all descendant elements that contain the text string "Name". The text() function finds the text within an element, skipping element text and text within its child elements. You can use this in your XPath 1.0: substring-after(normalize-space(//P[DT='Name']),") Chemical modification of the crystalline structure of poly(acrylic acid) by reaction with alcohols and subsequent effect on its thermal degradation.
