The institution listed is for the Center, which is not necessarily the institution for the investigator. Type 2 diabetes mellitus (T2DM) is associated with insulin resistance. A potent mitogen, insulin is known to have an important role in the development of diabetes-associated cardiovascular disease. Accordingly, treatment of diabetic patients with insulin at higher than physiological concentrations may be of clinical benefit in reducing cardiovascular risk. However, insulin stimulates hypertrophy and hyperplasia in cultured vascular smooth muscle cells (VSMC) and induces a state of phenotypic transformation in endothelial cells. Although VSMC play a major role in the pathogenesis of diabetes-associated vascular dysfunction, their role in insulin-induced pathology is not well defined. We hypothesize that insulin stimulation of vascular smooth muscle cells alters the expression of genes that regulate VSMC phenotype and function, leading to a modified response to atherogenic and vasoconstrictive stimuli. In preliminary studies, we have found that insulin regulates the expression of genes related to proliferation and function of VSMC. Significantly, we have identified that insulin stimulation of VSMC increases the expression 6d1f23a050
