I've opened the disk on the desktop, made sure it is ext4, and attached it to a mount point in my home folder. I thought it should be accessible as any other mounted drive, but it isn't. Can I set a disk to a particular location? Or can I set a file to a particular location? A: By partition I don't think you mean a hard drive partition, but rather "the space on the hard drive that you can make all files and directories". One of these partitions is usually the mount point, but you don't have to have a mount point. Here's a quote from "The Ubuntu installer comes with an option to install GRUB to the "Ubuntu Filesystem" which is not necessarily a partition. Since GRUB needs to be told where to find the "GUID Partition Table" (used to identify individual partitions) and to find the Linux Filesystem, it needs to be told where to find both (using the "device for boot loader" option of the installer). Using the "device for boot loader" option, GRUB will install in the partition itself. As far as the Ubuntu Filesystem goes, the Installer sets that up automatically and leaves it at /, which is already mounted." Several weeks ago, I wrote about some of the best sitting and standing desk options on the market. While those posts were mostly about hybrid desks, I think all of us need to make an effort to stand regularly (at least a couple of hours a day). If you like the idea of some mobile capability combined with the benefits of sitting 6d1f23a050
