Sleep disorders are common in the pediatric population, ranging from simple conditions such as sleep walking to more complex conditions such as narcolepsy or restless legs syndrome. Prevalence data suggest that an estimated 14% of children and adolescents have a primary sleep disorder, and as many as one third of all children with upper respiratory tract infections have a comorbid sleep disorder. Common sleep disorders are commonly treated with behavioral and pharmacologic interventions. A review of sleep disorders will discuss the most common presentations, diagnostic criteria, and available treatments. Pediatricians are increasingly expected to play a central role in recognizing, managing, and treating these disorders. Crematoriums are being plagued by a nasty new health threat – mould. White mould has been found on 22 of the 28 crematoria in Scotland that carry out the burial of more than 900 bodies every year. The Health and Safety Executive said the mould could make people sick and said all those involved in the Cremation Society of Scotland’s bodies were being monitored. It said: “The mould is on the surfaces and on tools used to clean the crematoria. “This confirms earlier concerns that there were potential environmental health risks.” Health and Safety Executive inspectors found the mould after they visited the three crematoria in Glasgow – the city with the highest number of deaths in Scotland in 2012 – and 10 in Edinburgh. The news comes as figures show a sharp rise in the number of children and young people being cremated in Scotland. In total there were 414 cremations for children aged under 19 between 2005 and 2009. Last year alone there were more than 1,400. The average age of death of children in Scotland has gone down while the death rate of children aged between zero and nine has increased from 12.6 deaths per 100,000 between 1999 and 2003 to 16.1 deaths per 100,000 between 2005 and 2009. The number of children being cremated also increased from just 12 between 2000 and 2005 to 38
