Oxidative stress is the unifying factor in several neurodegenerative disorders. Mutations in Cu,Zn-superoxide dismutase (SOD1) gene are responsible for familial amyotrophic lateral sclerosis. In this report, we describe the shuttling of mutant SOD1 in living cells and elucidate the kinetics of this process. We demonstrate that mutant SOD1, compared with wild-type SOD1, is exported from the nucleus to the cytoplasm faster in terms of both dwell time and amount of protein. Mutant SOD1 is also exported from the cell faster. The proportion of mutant SOD1 in the cytoplasm is, however, equal to the proportion of this protein in the nucleus. This is in agreement with the notion that the majority of mutant SOD1 in the cell is localized either in the cytoplasm or in the nucleus, but the extent of the protein is not enriched in any particular cellular compartment. Since these results are based on a single protein, we suggest that the process of exporting mutant SOD1 is a common phenomenon. Winter 2014: Urban US 'Chinatown' This week's post comes to you from Shanghai, China. From over here, I'm going to try to stay focused on what is happening across the Pacific Ocean. I'll be trying to write
