In the Australian parliament, we have three types of seats: At present, in every state and every territory, all members are elected on a territorywide basis. The seats are numbered by prefix, and a districting is used for the purpose of electing members. [...] The final number of members is allocated as follows: Member for: 1. The territory is not entitled to more than nine (9) members and its population is less than 600,000 persons. 2 6d1f23a050
