It is the oldest and most distinguished on the campus. The building was constructed in 1911, in the Beaux Arts style of architecture. It was listed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1975. Design Science Hall was the first to use fireproof materials in its construction. It was designed by Atlanta, Georgia architect Henry John Klutho. The interior was designed by Maynard Dixon, also of Atlanta. It was designed to replace the previous science building of the university, which was destroyed in the third fire of the university in 1901. The building is designed symmetrically around a central axis, with a front entrance on University Avenue. The building is made of limestone and brick, with stone embellishments, including arched windows and dormers. The first floor contains the south-facing entrance with double doors, with a projecting portico. The second story has arched windows on each side. In the center of the building is a cupola containing a weather vane. Construction The building was constructed in 1911-1912. The University had been planning to build a new science hall since the previous building was
