Motley Fool helps millions of people attain financial freedom through our website, podcasts, books, newspaper column, radio show, and premium investing services. Let's put Google's financial picture into perspective. Google went public in 2004, and has remained a public company ever since. Investors who purchased shares back in the IPO period are now showing a healthy return on their investment, despite recent market woes. Here's a brief look at just how well they're doing. Image source: Google. Google is in the black In the last decade, Google stock has risen nearly 700%, boosting the value of Google shares to more than $926 billion. During this time, a single share of Google has risen nearly $1,300, or 110%, for shareholders to a current value of $65 per share. That's an impressive return. However, a closer look at Google's financial statements reveals one important detail: Google has returned an average of just over 3% a year. That might not sound impressive, but consider that a three-year T-

Bill rate of 5% is about twice as good, and investors have done much better than that, eroding the effectiveness of the comparison. Google has returned 2% a
